

I am concerned that the citizens of the United States are unaware of the possible conflicts of interest between corporations and broadcast media. Here's a link to a story posted on the www.fair.org site that demonstrates why a company like General Electric should not be even allowed to own one television station.

It appears that corporations are censoring their employees that report the news. With the recent events many are afraid to report any anti-war story for fear of losing their job or being accused of being a traitor.

The reason why I specifically mention General Electric is they are a provider of weapons systems for the US Military. This demonstrates the conflict of interest between the people that are suppose to be reporting the news. How can a weapons system manufacturer be anti-war or even express an anti-war viewpoint?

Myself and many of my friends feel that the BBC World News and other foreign sources are much better at providing news about America than America itself.

Something needs to be done before Americans are ruled by the interests of corporations bottom lines. We need more regulations to give the airwaves back to the public for the freedom of this nation.
